Drivers' Conduct Safety Importance

The average motorist may safely operate a car for years before a faulty driving procedure or a momentary lapse of concentration involves him in a fatal or injury accident.

"Long periods of accident-free driving may develop a sense of security which tends to dull precise, attentive driving habits," pointed out California Highway Patrol Commissioner Bradford M. Crittenden.

"That is why the Patrol constantly re-emphasizes the necessity for 'self-enforcement,' or defensive driving. Two primary elements are involved. One is the accurate perception of the total roadway scene, with the necessary adjustments in your driving to allow for any potential hazard. The second is an unwavering compliance with the law."

"I cannot overstress the latter element," the commissioner said. "Statistics all too clearly reveal that violations result in accidents. Each time you commit a hazardous violation, whether knowingly or unconsciously, you place yourself in a potential accident-causing situation."

"Much time and thought have gone into elements designed to make highway travel safer for you. Better designed cars, improved enforcement, better engineered highways and stepped up education all contribute to highway safety. But ultimately, safety depends upon individual motorist. The difference between accident-free motoring and a fatal crash generally lies in the conduct of a driver upon the highway," he concluded.

SAVINGS SPECTACULAR

"How can you sell so low?" many people ask. There are three reasons we are able to offer such bargains:

- VOLUME
By buying quality merchandise in huge quantities we are able to lower our unit cost — and pass the savings along to our customers.
- LOW MARK-UP
We operate on the theory that a minimum of profit on each item means more items will be sold, more customers will be made, and in the long run we will prosper.
- SATISFIED CUSTOMERS
Almost always, satisfied customers become steady customers. This is why we have grown so fast — and will continue to grow.
